The Record: Albert, 405 miles 6 laps ; Littlewood, 387 miles 2 laps.

When the bright sun first streamed into Madi son Square Garden this morning, there were still eighteen men "packing sawdust" in the eighth of a mile track, though not more than half that number could be said to really be . DOSTON'S PLUCKY SON.

Dan Herty, the strong and steady Boston boy, still maintained the lead gained yesterday morning, though George Cartwright was only eight miles behind and in far better condition than at the same hour yesterday morning.

Herty, to maintain his lead, must needs have the best of luck, for if he stopped to prick a blister the clean-limbered Britisher would overtake

Herty tramped 100 miles and 7 laps from nidnight to Wednesday midnight, and was 312 miles 7 laps from the place where he started on Sunday night. That was seven miles behind Littlewood's score at the same hour, but Herty was in fine feather, while Littlewood in his race was suffering from an inflamed stomach and his feet were troubling him, too, HOW OTHER BACES WERE WON.

In all record-breaking contests the breakers have travelled under the record till the end of the fourth day and even later, as will be shown by this table, which indicates the work for each of the first three days by Charlie Rowell in his 602-mile run; Jimmie Albert in his 621-mile race; Littlewood in his last Fall's record mak-

Albert, in his race, ran 112 miles on Thursday: Littlewood covered 11054 on that day, 108% on Friday, and then walked in on Saturday, having only 85 miles to travel. CHANCES OF RECORD BREAKING.

It is by no means impossible that Herty or Cartwright should best the record of 62334 miles made last Fall by Littlewood. THE "LEPPER" LOOMS UP.

As predicted by THE EVENING WORLD yesterday, Lepper Hughes had crowded his bulky form forward and was in fourth place at breakfast time this morning, and still forging ahead at a most remarkable pace for such an old "ringer."

CLOSE ON HEGELMAN'S HEELS. He was only nine miles behind Peter Hegelman, the spider-legged jeweller, and the old champion breathed out; "By bedtime to-night I'll be in third place."

THE ENGLISHMAN IN BETTER SHAPE. Cartwright got ninety minutes of restful sleep last night, and his drowsiness of yesterday has left him. Had he the pluck of Herty he would be an easy winner of this race, and there is little choice between these two for first place. according to the experienced.

GROWING INTEREST IN THE BACE. The race is an interesting one at any rate, and the attendance grows larger each day.

A CHAMPION PEMALE PED.

Among the spectators to-day was Mrs. Tobias, the champion six-day female pedestrian of America since the death of Amy Howard. Mrs. Tobias is a middle-aged woman of pleasing ways. She has a record of 400 miles, and once in s walk against Belle McKelvey, neither she nor her rival left the track for an instant for three days and nights.

Mrs. Tobias is Mrs. Bagley in private life, and resides in Third avenue. She is one of the en-tries for the six-day female race at Baltimore next week. Belle is the wife of Billy Meeks, and they live at l'aterson, N. J.

WOMEN DICYCLISTS THERE, TOO. The young women who are to take part in the fifty-hour bicycle race at the Garden next week are, in their knee-breeches and riding-jackets, picturesque figures each day among the specta-tors of the go-as-you-please. They are in daily practice on the floor of the room at the Madisor evenue entrance to the pavilion, but the vulgar crowd is barred from witnessing their practice. HOW THE MONEY IS COMING IN. The gate receipts up to midnight last night were a trifle more than $3,200, and Colvin and Hoagland, the stakeholders for the pedestrians who are to divide one-half the receipts of the week, have $1,600 in their hands already. This indicates that the men who cover the fn the receipts will have $3,500 or $4,000 to divide at the end of the race.

500 miles necessary to entitle them to a share

HERTY SETS HIS TASK. In the fourth day of last Fall's race Dan Herty ran 10:14s miles. His schedule of work for today is 108 miles, and his trainer, the veteran Jim Smith, who was a favorite ped himself in the days of heel-aful-toe performances, says; Dan laid out a schedule on a new plan at the beginning of the work. He proposed to divide the work more evenly than the leaders in former races have done. Instead of doing all in his power the first three days he planned for doing more than 100 miles each day during the week.

"If he had any one to urge him, as Albert and Littlewood each had, he would surely beat the record, and I think he will any way."

THEY EXPECT CITIZEN TRAIN.

It was said at the Garden that Citizen Train will be there this evening, and that he will be invited to partake of a supper in his honor by the managers of the contest. HIBERNIANS TO RALLY BUGHES.

"Lepper" Hughes was spurred to new effort this morning by the receipt of a note informing him that a delegation from the Ancient Order of Hibernians would visit the Garden this even-ing to cheer him on in his work.

A KICK ABOUT DEADHEADS.

A RICK ABOUT DEADIEADS.

On the counting of tickets and receipts it was noted that the complimentary tickets, each inscribed good until used, were very scarce in the boxes, and a little figuring revesled that there were 5,000 complimentaries admitting gentlemen and 8,000 ladies' complimentary tickets still unused.

The walkers are talking strong talk about it, and it is said the complimentary tickets unused before Saturday will be repudiated.

HUGHES WINS GOLDEN OPINIONS.

"Lepper" Hughes's work for the first twelve accurs of the day showed up to the best advantage. He had reduced the gap between him and Hegelman by 2% miles and was 714 miles behind the watchmaker. He had travelled 114 miles further than Herry to although Herry had increased his lead over Cartwright by one Old-timers declare that Hughes will reach second place by to-morrow and that he will force a pace for Herty during the last hours of the race. SCORE AT 1 O'CLOCK.

HORRIBLE OUTRAGES IN ARMENIA.

A New-Made Bride Seized and Pleaned Into Boiling Pilef.

[BY CABLE TO THE PRESS NEWS ASSOCIATION.] ATHENS, May 9.—One of those dreadful raids which Turkish authority has yet been unable to prevent was made on the town of Mouch, in Armenia, by a band of Kurds last night. They swooped down from the mountains, and taking possession of the town, plundered and of simple justice, backed by an overwhelming taking possession of the town, plundered and devastated it for a whole night.

A Christian marriage festival was going on when the barbarians burst in upon the party and scattered it in all directions.

They seized the bride, submitted her to every species of indignity, and then threw her, half dead, into a cauldron of boiling pilof, which was cooking for the feast.

After the perpetration of other horrors the band disappeared before daylight. No effort has been made by the authorities to follow them to their fastnesses in the mountains.

Tragic Fate.

Death-Charged Wire.

This morning a stout young fellow, big-bodied and good looking is lying in an ice-box at Michael J. Boylan's, undertaker's, Pavonia avenue. Hoboken, but with no trace of slow wasting disease, no mark of violence upon him. On his right forearm is a burn the size of s half dollar. Through this red disk death entered last night and took poor Maroney from a world in which he was penniless and, worse, without relatives and almost without friends.

Last night at 7 o'clock when the brown twilight was settling around the docks and shiplight was settling around the docks and shipping of the Jersey river front, this lusty fellow in the full flush of manly strength and health, wandered through the dreary waste, down the tracks past the wart-like cabins where the low Italian workmen vegetate at home, and applied to Supt. C. A. Haskin for work in the North River Tunnel.

He accompanied an old employee of the tunnel company, a young fellow who boarded at 554 Anderson street, where young Maxoney also lodged. He was strong, active, and his character vouched for. Supt. Haskin told him to go ahead and shove cars.

The two men got on the small lift which takes the workers down to the tunnel and brings up the small iron cars, about the size of mud-diredgers scoops, which are filled with the glutinous soil from the river-bed.

A drop of about thirty-five feet brought the two men to the mouth of the tunnel. It is about seven feet in height, and the width of the earth that is filled into the shaft is about twelve or thirteen feet. Water trickled from the Portland cement of the brick arch.

Through the long darkness into which the new-comer peered glittered the electric lights, which ran along the right-hand side of the tunnel at intervals of fifty feet. The glistening line faded away into the distance.

Maroney would have entered with more trepidation into this black tube had he known that he would leave it feet foremost on a stretcher.

essential element down to the poor devils, working 1, 805 feet in under the river, at the "heading."

A foot above this air tube run four wires, two of them, the upper ones, being telephone wires connecting the "heading" with the office, and two lower ones, not an inch apart, feeding electricity to the thousand Sawyer-Man electric lights which prick the gloom feebly the length of the tunnel.

Over the pasty soil, minsled with ashes, the two toilers forged aliead and through the softer soil later on, until they reached the first airchamber, 1,000 feet in.

'Look out for the mule," said his companion to Maronay, as they picked their way along. This interesting animal is used to draw the small cars over the rails, and is apt to buck into the careless and unwitting stranger.

When they arrived at the air-chamber they stopped and began loading the sticky blue earth into the cars. For an hour they worked steadily. Then there was a slight break in the line of cars and they waited.

Maroney's companion had his back turned to him. After a few moments he heard a quick, muffled groan which seemed jerked out of his companion and suddenly cut off. Then immediately the thud of a falling body. He hastily turned and saw Maroney lying in a heap on the right-hand side of the tunnel close to the electric wires and air-pipe.

He ran to him, and tried to raise him. To his horror, the new hand was dead. His shirt was wet with perspiration. He had seated himself on the air tube and leaned his right arm on the two electric wires. They were pathways of death, and the electric fluid burned out his soul free f om his vigorous body in the twinkling of and eye.

His companion callen others who were near though. They hastened has the nouth of

His companion callen others who were near at hand. They hastened back to the mouth of the tunnel, got a stretcher, and, returning, bore out the lifeless form of young James Maroney.

They placed him in the office, and a messenger was sent to apprise Supt. Haskin, who was at home taking dinner, of the wretched fate of the new man whom he had engaged two hours before.

The body was taken to Boylan's, and the County Physician, which is the Jersey equivalent for Coroner, was notified.

This is the first accident in the tunnel, Foreman James Dunn says since the big calamity at the mouth of it, when twenty-one men were killed, some years ago.

The Company will defray the funeral expenses of the unfortunate man, who has no friendly eye to drop a tear of regret over his untimely end.

> SHRUB OAK, N. Y., May 9.—The greater part of this village has been reduced to a heap of smoking ruins by a conflagration which has raged for four hours and destroyed almost every onsiness house in the place.

> At 11 r. M. an explosion was heard in the oil coom in the rear of the oil and grocery store of

With the first intimation of the fire somebody set the church bell ringing, and the entire population turned out to fight the flames.

There is no engine company at Shrub Oak, and the best the citizens could do was to form a bucket brigade, which was done at once.

Despite their efforts the fire gathered headway, and very soon Darrows store was a mass of flames.

Mr. Darrow, who is about sixty-eight years of age and afflicted with heart disease, made a frantic effort to save his stock, and although he succeeded in getting out a small portion of it, it was probably at the cost of his life.

From the grocery store the flames spread on all sides, practically unchacked, though the people did their best with their primitive appliances.

The little frame Methodist Church caught fire and was consumed, to the great grief of the people. Then, almost simultaneously, Lea's shoe store and Henderson's carriage atore caught fire.

Do you care to state on what terms you play with the Club?" asked the reporter. "I would rather be excused from answering that one-tion," said Tim. with another smile.

Where do you join the Club? "I start for Boston this afternoon, " said Tim. lisplaying at the same time a "grip" containing his luggage, packed ready for its removal. When will you play your first game?

"That I cannot say just now, as I am not in ondition and will want a few days' practice." 'The boys will be glad to see you," ventured the reporter.

"Not more so than I will be to be with then nce more," was the reply. After saying again that the terms under which he signed were satisfactory to both parties. Tim ook his departure.

Keefe is a trifle fat for ball-playing, the effect of a Winter's good keeping, but he will work steadily now that he knows he is fixed for the season, and will soon be setting the pace in the Isague as in seasons of yore.

Just what his next move in this direction would be he was unable to say, but he is intent upon acting promptly and taking the most effective method that presents itself.

Workman James Maroney's Sudden and The Methodist Church and Three Stores Carry This Good News Wherever the Eugenie Tells a Damaging Story of the Outrage.

> She Was Taken to a Saloon at Ninety-Seventh Street and Ninth Avenue.

Policeman Thomas O'Connor, who is charged with an ontrage upon Eugenie Hanson, the sixcen-year-old girl, who was found in distress in Central Park on March 9, was further examined before Justice Murray at the Harlem Police Court this morning. O'Connor was brought to court by Detective Fitzpatrick, of the West One Hundredth street station, to which the accused bluccost belongs. Eugenie came from the Florence Mission in ompany with the matron of that institution and of Roundsman Cooper, of Police Head

Miss Hanson sat at the end of a long table beside Justice Murray. She was plainly but neatly dressed.

Justice Murray again interrogated the girl, and it required repeated efforts to get her to give plain and positive answers regarding the precise manner in which the alleged outrage was committed.

Eugenie hung her head down and acted like one ashamed and embarrassed. She finally yielded to the Justice's inquiries and gave her story.

one ashamed and embarrassed. She finally yielded to the Justice's inquiries and gave her story.

In addition to the details given in yesterday's Exxxiva World, Engenie said that she was positive O'Connor was the man who criminally and forreibly assaulted her. It was about 10,30 in the forenoon of March 9 in a room in the rear of John McCarthy's saloon at Ninety-seventy street and Ninth avenue.

O'Connor, she said, was in the full uniform of a policeman, and when she lost her way and met him and asked him to direct her to the House of Mercy, in Eighty-sixth street, he took her to the saloon. He boited the door leading to the street, and taking off his belt forced her down upon a sofa, in spite of a scream and struggles on her part.

After the assault he sent her to Central Park and told her to wait there until his arrival.

Justice Murray questioned the girl about her antecedents. She was born at Charleston, S.C., and her mother died when she was an infant.

At three years of age her father, being unable to give her proper care, put her in an institution at Charleston, where she remained for several years, until she was able to go at work in a family and earn her own living.

Her father died in the meantime, and she was left entirely alone in the world without any relatives.

John Kenny, one of the barkeepers in McCarthy's saloon at the time mentioned by the girl, said he remembered seeing an officer in the back room with a woman, but they were not O'Connor before the latter's arrest, and that he did not see him with Miss Hanson at any time.

Capt. Berghold told the Judge that Miss Hanson had readily identified O'Connor from among thirty-four other policemen standing in the ranks of the second platoon of his precinet.

John M. Coman, who appeared for O'Connor, wanted his client discharged on the ground that there was no corroborative testimony to warrant the Court in holding him, but Justice Murray smiled and said there were corroborative circumstances as shown in the testimony of the girl and Capt. Berghold.

A charge of rape was formally entered against O'Connor and bail was fixed at $10,000.

The policeman said it was impossible for him to get bail and he was again locked up.

He will be brought into court to-morrow morning at 9.50.
